

ÚŘAD PRO OCHRANU HOSPODÁŘSKÉ SOUTĚŽE

Daniel Stankov

Head of Division of External Relations and Administration; Czech Competition Authority

Daniel Stankov has served at the Czech Office for the Protection of Competition since 2006, and served as a director of the International Department since 2010. Since 2012 his responsibilities have covered both international relations of the Czech competition authority and PR as well as external activities at the national level.

In 2015 he took over the Division of External Relations and Administration, and has also been responsible for the human resources policy of the Czech competition authority together with financial, public procurement and internal administration issues.

Beside the cooperation among competition authorities he focuses on international aspects of competition policy, European competition and consumer policy and questions of competition enforcement in emerging markets. His responsibilities have also covered competition advocacy initiatives of the Czech competition authority. He participated in several twinning programs focused on independence and institutional design of authorities in countries newly establishing competition enforcement agencies. He has been a member of the Governmental expert group on civil service and the Advisory committee on competition advocacy.

Daniel Stankov graduated from Masaryk University in Brno, received his Master's degrees in political science and international relations. He studied European law and received Master's in Interdisciplinary research and law studies on Eastern Europe at University of Bologna. He lectures international aspects of competition policy in context of European integration at the Faculty of Social Studies, Masaryk University in Brno.
